

International organizations, including FIFA and the global football journey

Thousands of people around the world have been watching the Qatar World Cup 2022 on their monitors, and it is not just football fans who are captivated by it. FIFA, also known as the Fédération Internationale de Football Association, is surely a term that is becoming more popular as the World Cup approaches. FIFA is a name that many people from various backgrounds are aware with because it is a regulating body of the football industry that is well-established and widely recognised. The current essay examines FIFA as a complex organization with a long history and a clear purpose.

FIFA is the largest sports regulatory body in the world, with its headquarters in Zurich, Switzerland (What Is FIFA?, 2022). It is responsible for overseeing the administration of all significant international football competitions, or "soccer tournaments" in the US. Unquestionably, the FIFA World Cup™, a name that has been registered as a trademark in the sector (What Is FIFA?, 2022). Every four years, the World Cup is held with the ultimate goal of determining which team, out of the many men's football players who are all representing qualified nations, is the best. Only the United Nations is larger than the 200 member associations that make up FIFA, making it the second-largest international association in the world (What Is FIFA?, 2022).
